Most of the students were well aware of the concept of Global Citizenship Education but had a natural scepticism towards 'diffuse concepts', as GCE/GL seemed to be for them. In the discussion they raised the question of responsibility in the economic system and how a single teacher could set counteroffensive activities that 'really' make sense. The least common denominator was like the saying constant dripping wears the rock.

After the short theory and first discussion into GL two methods were actively played. The first is called "on the field" and is about the topic of inclusion, feeling alone and group dynamics. Especially the discussion afterwards was interesting as participants recalled a behaviour that they would never have expected from themselves.

The last method was a role-play game about the question "Should Pepe migrate". The group came to the decision that he SHOULD migrate and the discussion afterwards mainly was about the depicted reasons why he SHOULD NOT migrate. Typically all the arguments by the family members that were against Pepe's migration to "a better country" were led by fear. Fear of death, fear of loss of identity, fear that they never see him again, fear...

After the football game there was a summer festival with intercultural food, music, children's program and information stands of different initiatives. Rudi Anschober, the Secretary for Integration of the regional government of Upper Austria, was honoring persons and institutions as good practice examples, like e.g. a tailor shop who is working with asylum seekers. Around 800 people attended the event, many of them migrants and refugees, and stated an example of intercultural encounter. The money collected that day (by selling of food, drinks etc.) is used for the reconstruction of a refugee home in Linz. Most of the people attended the event to play football, to eat and to meet. Therefore the challenging point was that just some of them were motivated to come to the information stands to learn more about the connections between sports and human rights. So the event was successful in mobilizing many people to come together to an intercultural encounter and a public sport activity. It didn't reach the expectations fully in the sense of content-related questions. But maybe this format of the sport event was not the right one for this objective.

Short description: The Long Day of Flight was launched by UNHCR Austria in 2012 and has been held every year since. This year, on 29 September 2017, Südwind organized together with 18 other NGOs and initiatives an event called "Fluchtpunkte" in the Volksgarten, a central park in Linz. All day long information stands, exhibitions, films, a reading island, live music, culinary delicacies, a book presentation, dances, living books and many other activities offered information, exchange, entertainment and encounter for all people interested.

The aim of the event was on the one hand to offer new insights into the complex topic of flight and on the other hand to give the opportunity for people with and without refugee background to come together, to meet and exchange. That was also the reason, why the event took place in the Volksgarten. Many people go there to hang out, meet, play or just to walk through it to get from the train station to the city center (and vice versa). So it was the ideal spot to be visible to the public and to reach people who would not go to these kinds of events usually. As weather that day was really great, many people visited the park. It was a nice and open atmosphere.

On this kind of public events it is not so easy to go into depth, when it comes to content. On a sunny Friday afternoon after work in the middle of a park people may not be so much in the mood for “learning”. But the aim of bringing people together and being visible was met all the more.

In addition to this general program, there is also a special program for schools called "School of Flight". After an introduction to the topic, the participants where split into small groups and went through several short workshops (focus groups) held by the NGOs. Südwind offered one of the short workshops (focus group), which 3 groups attended. After the workshops the participants got the chance to experience the public performance “Arrival”, played by a school’s improvisational theatre group.
